about a new instrument for making the blind to see, said to be the invention of Dr: Noishewski. The principle of the instrument is the sensitiveness to light of selenium and tellurium, both of which change their quality as conductors of electricity with a they are exposed. In stating that the blind can "see" by the instrument, a relative menning only is intended. While their actual vision will be upaffected they will feel the various effects of changing light by its action. It is claimed that Dr. Noishewski has enabled a totally blind man to find the windows in a room, and after a little practice to distinguish approaching men from approaching animals. It is further stated that the inventor is at work upon improvements to his de vice, which he hopes to make so efficient that the blind will be able to tell almost with certainty when they are approaching opaque or trans parent objects.-Ex.
